Tehran Oil Boost Pressures Iragis

MANAMA, Bahrain — Iran is taking advantage of a lull in the Gulf fighting to increase oil exports and bolster its economy, Western diplomats said. The Iranians are reported to be exporting more than 2 million barrels a day, up from a range of 1.6 million to 1.8 million barrels a day during the spring. The difference represents an added $20 million a day, or more, in badly needed forcign exchange. In addition, diplomats said

Iraq began the so-called "tanker war" in the spring of 1983 for two reasons, diplomats in the Gulf said. One reason reflected hope that an oil crisis would induce the superpowers to intervene and bring about an end to the Gulf war, which Iraq began in September

The other reason was the great vulnerability of Iran to attacks on oil shipping. Tankers are Iran's only means for sending oil abroad Iraq, which lost its port at Fao to

Latin Plan Is Resisted matically in August and September By Honduras By James LeMoyne New York Times Service

SAN SALVADOR - Central American foreign ministers appear to have failed to make significant progress toward carrying out a regional peace plan after two days of meetings here, largely because of opposition from Honduras, according to diplomats involved in the talks

In what was intended to be the first formal step toward putting into effect the treaty signed two weeks ago by Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, their foreign ministers agreed on Thursday to little more than a declaration that they had constituted themselves as an executive committee to apply the new plan.

They failed, largely because Honduras, which has been closely allied to the Reagan administration and has provided haven for the Nicaragnan rebels, resisted forming special committees to study methods for accomplishing the goals of the peace plan.

The foreign ministers said they would meet again in 30 days in Managua and would fly to Venezu-ela over the weekend to ask support for their plan from the Contadora group of nations, as well as the United Nations and the Organizanon of American States.

The major point of contention at this stage appears to be continued support for the contras by Honduras and the United States. Nicaragua continues to insist that aid to the contras be ended immediately, whereas the Reagan administration is demanding that the rebels be maintained to press the Sandinists to live up to the accord's provisions for political liberalization in Nica-

Last month, Dr. Nair started a rage-therapy program for drivers who have trouble controlling their anger on the clogged freeways. Callers, up to a dozen a day, are advised to keep calm. As for his own emotions, Dr. Nair, a self-professed workaholic who spends much of the time on the road away from his family, says the car phone is soothing. "I rarely see my family during the week," he says. "This helps me feel a lot calmer." In New York, Chicago, Dallas, Houston and every

In just three years since the cellular technology was introduced, the number of subscribers has risen to about 884,000, according to the Cellular Telecommunications

Industry Association. A year ago it was 500,000. Nynex Mobile Communication says it has more than 60,000 subscribers in its New York and New England markets. Every major car rental agency offers the phones now in certain cities.

But by far the largest market is Los Angeles, laced by freeways and made for car phones. There are about 100,000 phones in the area and it seems that almost every Mercedes and BMW displays the little zigzag antenna for the cellular phones. But industry officials say that the device is not just a toy for the rich.

"We are seeing more use by unglamorous people with small businesses," said Reed Royalty, a vice president of PacTel Cellular, which, along with LA Cellular, serves the Los Angeles basin. "The idea that it's only movie stars and their agents is pretty much passe."

Thus, for example, Gary Garrett, a locksmith for 18 years, got tired of having to leave the freeway several times a day to look for a telephone booth. Now he takes and makes calls on the road, sometimes calling customers in their cars, and crossing the city several times in a single

U.S. Cuts Growth Estimate

Revised GNP. Price Data Give Mixed Signals

By Anne Swardson

WASHINGTON - The U.S. gross national product grew at an annual rate of 2.3 percent in the second quarter, less than previously estimated, the government said Friday, in one of three reports that gave mixed signals about the U.S.

economy. The government said that U.S. consumer prices rose a scant 0.2 percent in July, the lowest monthly increase so far this year.

It also reported that after-tax profits of U.S. corporations rose 4.2 percent in the second quarter after falling 3.7 percent in the first

The reports had a mixed effect on the markets, which have been looking for signals since the Commerce Department reported last week that the U.S. trade delicit widened dramatically in June. The dollar slid in Europe and New York in response to the GNP revision. (Page 7.) Prices on the New York Stock Exchange were narrowly higher although the dollar dampened their advance. (Page 8.) The GNP growth figure compared with a original estimate of 26 percent. The revision was attributed primarily to the $15.71 billion trade deficit in June. The June trade gap has caused the dollar to fall on world markets. particularly against the yen, since it was reported last week. And the White House said Friday that data on exports that contributed to the GNP revision had raised doubts about steady improvement in the trade deficit. The Commerce Department said that the big June gap in merchan-dise trade caused the net exports entry in the GNP calculations to be lowered by $5.5 billion.

The lower figure for net exports "does call into question the basic pattern of solid improvement in net exports that had been appearing in earlier estimates," said Leslye Arsht, a deputy White House spokesman. He did not elaborate.

But economists predicted that the trade situation would improve in coming months and that the U.S. economy would continue to grow at a moderate pace.

"People should not regard the downward revision of second-quarter GNP "as a warning sign that the economy is falling apart. It is not," said Donald Straszheim, chief economist of the New York brokerage firm of Merrill Lynch.

The border talks, which resumed early this year after an eight-year hiatus, are seen as a sign of gradually warming ties between the two Communist powers.

"We have the grounds to feel very satisfied." Mr. Rogachev said. Mr. Rogachev said both sides agreed on the principles that the border dividing northeastern China and Soviet Siberia should follow the main channels of the Amur and Ussuri rivers, in accordance with treaties established in czarist times. Qian Qichen, a Chinese deputy foreign minister, said, "As regards principles, the opinions of the two sides were completely in accord." But he added, "there are certain sections where there are still differ-

Later, the Japanese government ordered a Soviet deputy trade representative to leave Tokyo, contending that he had refused to submit to police questioning in an industrial espionage case.

Some Western and Japanese diplomats say an underlying force in the deterioration of relations is Ivan I Kovalenko, the Central Committee's senior official in charge of relations with Japan.

Mr. Kovalenko, who was commandant of a prisoner-of-war camp for Japanese captured in the last days of World War II, is blamed by Japanese officials for promoting a tough and condescending attitude toward Japan.

"He still treats the Japanese as war prisoners," a senior Japanese official said in a recent interview. adding that Soviet officials with friendlier views toward Japan were either low-ranking diplomats or foreign trade specialists.

The Soviet Foreign Ministry did not respond on Thursday to a request submitted on Wednesday for an interview with Mr. Kovalenko.

4,000 Miners Dismissed in South Africa: Striker Slain

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatch JOHANNESBURG - Anglo American Corp. dismissed 4,000 striking black miners Friday at the Western Holdings mine in Orange Free State. About 44,000 other South African miners were threatened with dismissal, and a miner was killed when security officers fired on strikers.

The company said the 4,000 miners had voted themselves out of their jobs by refusing to return to work.

The action brought to about 10,000 the number of South African strikers dismissed since the National Union of Mineworkers started a strike Aug. 8 for higher wages at gold and coal mines.

The union said Friday that security officers fired lethal ammunition and rubber bullets at strikers Thursday night, killing a man, at the Libanon gold mine operated by Gold Fields of South Africa about 10 miles (65 kilometers) southwest

Gold Fields disputed the union's account. The company said a miner was killed and 20 seriously injured when an "armed mob of 250 peo-ple," including miners, stormed the gate of a hostel at Libanon.

As President, Reagan Clocks Over a Year in California

SANTA BARBARA, California -- President Ronald Reagan will pass a milestone during his 25-day vacation in California, which he is spending primarily at his mountain ranch northwest of here.

By the time Mr. Reagan returns to Washington on Sept. 6, he will have spent more than a year of his presidency in California, where he served as governor for eight years and plans to live after leaving office in 1989.

When Mr. Reagan completes his current trip, he will have been in California during 374 days of his presidency, including 290 days at the 688-acre (276-hectare) Rancho del Cielo. Most of the other 84 days were spent in the Los Angeles area, where Mr. Reagan has long lived, or in Palm Springs, where the Reagans vacation each year at Christ-

■ Pilot Disputes Theory

A co-pilot who saw the takeoff of the fatal flight said the wing flaps were extended, contradicting earlier reports they were in the wrong position, officials said Thursday, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Romulus, Michigan.

Officials have said that preliminary findings from flight recorder data indicated that the flaps. which are critical to the lift of the aircraft, were not in the proper position

John Lauber, a National Transportation Safety Board member, said the witness, a copilot on another Northwest light, was one of four pilots who saw the takeoff of the jet.

The co-pilot "noticed that the flaps and slats were down. They were in the extended position. This is his report of what he saw, Mr. Lauber said.

He said the other three pilots did not notice anything that looked unusual, which would include flaps set for the wrong posiby the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta departs from its policy of advising against widespread AIDS testing in U.S. hospitals. But in releasing new standards for protecting the nation's 6.5 million health care workers from the spread of the HIV virus, the agency noted the need for health care workers to consider all patients as potentially infected with HIV."

This is a compromise really, said Dr. Harold Jaffe, chief of the epidemiology branch of the AIDS program at the Centers for Disease Control. "There is no real data to suggest that testing would increase the safety of health care workers. But the reality is that some AIDS testing has already begun and this document attempts to assure that it will not result in the denial of treatment to those who test positive."

Pawned American Honor

A startling historical thunderbolt has just dropped. almost as an afterthought to the Iran-contra investigation: the United States came close to using South Africa as a paymaster for the contra rebels in Nicaragua. Is there no end to the American honor that the Reagan administration is willing to spend in this hapless cause?

The South African initiative took place in 1984, before Congress tightened the Boland restrictions on U.S. help for the contras. The motive, evidently, was to help contras and to develop a working relationship between the CIA and South African operatives, with special regard to Angola. At the time, the CIA was barred by another congressional amendment from taking part in Angola's civil war.

Even then, the idea of making common cause with a racist regime would have stirred wide disgust. Context makes the disclosure still more offensive. It is only one in a series of administration lunges in Central America that have traduced policies and principle. President Reagan has been so blindly ardent on Nicaragua that officials following his lead have on one occasion after another approved schemes that soured into national embarrassments:

The Argentine Connection, In its zeal to train a rebel force to oppose the Sandinists, the Reagan administration early obtained help from Argentina, then under the most ruthless military dictatorship in Latin America. Argentine officers worked with former Somoza National Guardsmen to train an exile force; this was the origin of the contras. When Mr. Reagan subsequently backed Britain in the Falkland war, the junta cried betrayal, believing it had earned at least U.S. neutrality. The World Court Debacie. What brought on the Boland amendment was the failure of William Casey, the CIA director, to inform Congress that the CIA was lawlessly mining Nicaraguan waters. When Managua appealed to the World Court, the Reagan administration boycotted the tribunal - and shrugged off a nearunanimous finding in Nicaragua's favor.

Superpower as Beggar. Denied funds for the contras by Congress, the administration begged for contributions from Saudi Arabia and Brunei, agreeing to their condition that the aid remain secret. Their willingness to help the administration circumvent Congress bought them unhealthy leverage over U.S. policy. Elliott Abrams, the State Department fund-raiser, then lied to Congress about a solicitation he later characterized as demeaning and humiliating. The Iran Arms Diversion, Whatever the administration's original reason for truding arms for hostages, an additional reason soon blossomed: the chance to divert millions in arms sales profits to the contras. Once again, contra fever led the administration to do what it promised it would never do: deal with terrorists. Mr. Reagan has spent the last nine months struggling to recover his credibility.

It's not hard to see why South Africa could have been tempted to come to the aid of the contras. Doing so would have earned it reaffirmed support from Washington, apartheid or no apartheid. But could any administration official have thought for one minute that South African aid for the contras was worth pawning a part of America's soul?

Iranian minesweepers: it sounds like a contradiction in terms. But even though, by agreement of everyone but Iran, it is Iranianlaid traines that threaten Gulf navigation, Iranian minesweepers are now out there in international waters trying to pick up mines. Operating in units equipped and trained by the United States in the old days, they are the latest recruits to an international florilla that includes the Americans, Soviets, British and French, with others perhaps to come.

This development goes beyond the factionalism or disarray or division of labor. whatever it is, that allows Iran to engage in mining and sweeping at the same time. Iran is coming to grant that no Gulf country has a greater interest than it does in free navigation. Unlike Iraq, Iran does not yet have pipelines to carry out the oil that finances its part of the Iran-Iraq war. Did Iran neglect this key fact for a while? In attacking the shipping of Iraq's allies, did it ignore that Americans and others might react by helping to keep sea-lanes open? That this new naval presence, while inhibiting Iraq from attacks on Iranian shipping, would also put foreign navies into waters that the Iranians insist are theirs alone to control?

To control and to police. Iranian authorities, denying they laid the mines or command the boats that now endanger Gulf traffic, declare that they can perform whatever naval services are required and that the foreign ships can go home. To advertise this claim. they invited Western reporters aboard one of the minesweepers this week. Tehran's minesweepers are welcome: they should know just where to look for the mines. It is cheeky of Tehran, however, to expect the very Gulf states it menaces to entrust the protection of their shipping to Ayatollah Khomemi.

A better idea was offered the other day by President Reagan's national security adviser. Frank Carlucci. "If the danger recedes" to U.S.-flag vessels, he said, "the escorting" by the U.S. Navy "can stop." Iran, though it is strong on issuing general threats, does not acknowledge responsibility for specific shipping attacks, attributing them to an "invisible hand." But if it is serious in urging the U.S. Navy to leave the Gulf, it should want to test this commitment by a ranking official stating the simple condition on which the United States would end the naval operations that Iran finds so offensive.

The Sad Choices in Haiti

The Reagan administration rightly presses as they were when Jean-Claude Duvalier fled I atin military dictators from Panama to Paraguay to yield power to civilian democrats. But in Haiti it supports Lieutenant General Henri Namphy's discredited junta as long as it adheres to its announced timetable and ground rules for transition to elected government. Going along with the military is a sensible course because Haiti simply doesn't have other functioning political institutions.

The elections now scheduled for November offer the only hope for a better alternative. Abandoning the junta undoubtedly would lead to postponement, at the very least, of the November vote. Paradoxically, an undemocratic junta thus seems democracy's best bet. Meanwhile the junta's record inspires scant confidence, and its commitment to a free and orderly election process cannot be taken for granted. It has squandered 18 months without producing any meaningful economic or political development. Haitians are still as poor and desperate ) the Kiviera on a U.S.-9 In June, the junta tried to supersede an independent electoral commission, backing down only under considerable popular and diplomatic pressure. Washington's included. Since, at least 40 civilians have died at the hands of soldiers or police. One victim was a presidential candidate. In response to popular protest, the military has been nothing but rigid. It has protected the jobs and fortunes of notorious Duvalierist thugs. These groups have an interest in provoking disorder in an attempt to derail the electoral process and keep their military protectors in power indefinitely.

Breaking the pledge to hold free elections would necessarily mean a break with the United States. Washington will have to keep a watchful eye and hope the elections provide an opening for genuine democrats to emerge. Sadly, there is no alternative.

The Nazi Legacy Will Linger

The death of Rudolf Hess in Spandau Prison brings to a close the story of the attempt at the Nuremburg trials to bring the leaders of the Third Reich to justice for their crimes committed in the name of the German people. Now that its last inmate is dead, Spandau may soon share the fate of the Chancellery and Hitler's villa at Berchtesgaden and be torn down to prevent it from becoming the object of a neo-Nazi cult. The physical monuments of the Third Reich are easy to destroy; far more difficult to expunge are the political and moral vestiges of the Nazi regime, the consequences which a divided Germany will continue to bear for a long time to come.

The Road Back to Damascus

The United States is returning its ambassador to Damascus, from where he was withdrawn last year following proof of Syrian complicity in terrorism. The decision marks another small step toward the rehabilitation of Syria in the West, and one reason commonly given for encouraging warmer rela-tions with President Hafez al-Assad is the influence he might have upon Tehran as the avatollahs' most important ally. So far there s little evidence to support this.

The offer by Hasherni Rafsanjani, Speaker of the Iranian parliament, to use his best offices to secure the hostages' release likely owes as much to political infighting in Tehran as it does to outside intervention. Anyway, his warning that a reciprocal U.S. gesture is needed - pressure on Israel and Kuwait to release terrorists - makes such a deal unthinkable. So the real reason that relations with Svria cannot be rejected is that Mr. Assad is the only conduit of even half-reliable information on the hostages. This conduit must be explored, which is why there is an argument for the return of the U.S. ambassador to Damascas. But nothing more than is necessary for that purpose should be considered.

Against Iran, Patience Is the Only Weapon

WASHINGTON — Whoever comes to power in Iran after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini will encounter severe problems. Iran faces enormous economic difficulties; no credit on world markets an oil industry ravaged by mismanagement and the Gulf war, and factory output that stands at a fraction of what it was under the shah. Politically, Kurdish insurgents continue attacks in their decades-old fight for independence; similar turmoil is on the rise in Baluchistan, and 1.5 million to 2 million Afghani refugees have flooded into Iran, some of whom, it can be assumed, are Soviet agents.

But along with all the problems, Ayatollah Khomeini will leave legacies of strength. The first is the ideological makeup of the populace. Many people have been killed in the war, left the country or been the victims of political repression. But one statistic rings out as crucial: 45 percent of all Iranians are now under to years old - an ideologically malleable group that assures the revolution a near majority of devout followers into the long-term future.

The second legacy is fierce independence. From World War II until the 1979 revolution, Iranians had believed that foreign powers controlled their desuny. This inferiority complex was especially intense regarding the United States, which did in fact hold great sway over internal Iranian affairs. (It was the United States that, in 1953, helped bring back the shah by orchestrating a coup that overthrew the militantly nationalist prime minis-ter. Mohammed Mossadegh). This psychology has been starkly reversed under Ayatollah Khomeini, and most Iranians — a people generally suscepti-ble to conspiracy theories — now consider Iran's destiny to be in Iranian hands.

Finally, Iran under Ayatollah Khomeini has become a martial state. Opposition to the war exists, but it cannot mask the reality of a new and aggressive military spirit. The last time Iran had fought a war was in 1826 against Russia — a war that Iran lost. Since, many Iranians had assumed the country had no taste or talent for war. But with the successful defense of Iranian territory against the Iraqi invasion, Iran has emerged as a country with not only fighting capabilities (which it had under the shah) but the will to use them. Combined with itspopulation and industrial-military potential, Iran vill be a regional military force far into the future. For the United States, now escalating its military presence in the Gulf, the implications of Iran's new-found warlike nature are profound — espe-cially when contrasted with the continuing U.S. qualms about using military force. Compare the most recent Iranian and American experiences with war. In the last eight years, Iran has lost hundreds of thousands of people in its conflict with Iraq, and it shows few signs that it will stop. Entire towns have been erased from the map in Khuzistan, waves of young Iranians have gone to their deaths with the promise of martyrdom, Iranian forces have been the targets of chemical weapons and Iraqi missiles have struck inside Tehran.

What is the United States willing to do to further punish such a country? How far is it willing to go? Disenchantment with the Vietnam War was based not only on American casualties and confusion as to why the United States was there but on a profound discomfort with the killing and destruction that U.S. military power had caused. Recall, too, the concern of the American populace when there were civilian casualties in Grenada, and when Colonel Mosmmar Gadhafi's daughter was killed in the air attack on Libya.

Now the Reagan administration has a list of potential Iranian targets for retaliation, targets reportedly chosen with an eye toward a minimal loss of life, either American or Iranian — "surgical strikes" that would entail little sacrifice, that would be punish Iran through technological wiz-ardry without soiling U.S. hands. But what can such a style of war-making accomplish against a country that has lost more people to war in the last seven years than the United States lost in World War II, Korea and Vietnam combined?

Thus, U.S. policy makers are faced with major questions about the use of its military strength and about the enduring nature of the Iranian revolution. foreseeable future. The options available to the pening to the peace proposals for a United States are limited, but they do exist. They will above all require patience and steadiness:

· Second, it should maintain only a low-key presence in the Gulf. Given the military constraints noted above, a military showdown not only would be useless as a coercive measure, it would further isolate Iran, enhance the regime's aggressive nature and even possibly force Iran into the Soviet camp.

This is not to say that the United States will never be forced to take a military stand against Iran. But that time has not come; the circumstances do not exist to warrant paying the high price of a military showdown. U.S. policy makers must realize that, even though dialogue or constructive relations with Iran are exceedingly difficult if not impossible, confrontation is not an acceptable alternative. A policy of patience and neutrality may be politically impalatable for the Reagan administration and its successor, but it is. the best path for the United States to follow.

The pro-Sandinists in press and

There are Democrats who reject moves toward peace by the White House principally out of distrust and contempt for the president. And some Republicans see any negotiations short of a total Sandinist surrender as a shameful sellout. Standing back: The speaker of the House of Representatives, Jim Wright, a Democrat, after being approached by the White House offered a set of a proposals for a cease-lire, suspension? of U.S. military aid to the contras and Soviet aid to the Sandinists. Soon enough, Washington was entering a few reservations to the Guatemals plan, appropriately. For in-stance, aid to the contras would cease a couple of months before the ceasefire got under way, plainly ridiculous. Some State Department people were blasphemous enough to suggest that Congress should put money in escrow for the contras in case the Sandinists med democracy and decided they didn't like it after all. The pro-Sandinists in this country acted as if it were a damnable sin to suggest that the United States should not immediately destroy the contras, whose existence brought about the opportunity for negotiations.

W ASHINGTON — In China re-cently, I asked my dinner host, an urbane provincial official, what he thought of Mikhail Gorbachev's prospects for success with economic reforms. He said, somewhat unconvineringly. "I suppose he will suc-ceed." Then, his face brightening, he added, but not before the Chinese." Without doubt, the Chinese, who have embarked upon their own ambitious program of economic reform and decentralization, take a wry pleasure in watching the Soviet Union, their former economic mentor, following the lead of its disciple.

China is seriously attentive to Soviet developments. How do the Chinese view them? What significance do they see in them for Chinese-Soviet relations? What are the implications of this perspective for the United States? During my visit, our small, invited delegation of Americans explored

Out to Lunch in English

Regarding the language column "India's Homely English" (July 13) by Steven R. Weisman:

William Safire was on vacation but his stand-ia. I fear, was out to lunch. Had Mr. Weisman at least checked Mr. Salite's bible, the Oxford English Dicnoncry, he would have been apprised that the political application of the useful and appropriate word "fissiparous" goes back to the 1870s in the West. As for "homely": the British usage, from which the more pejorative American sense diverged, dates from the 14th century; it is no more "Indian" than the spelling "colour" or "practise."

WILLIAM R. HUTCHISON, Charles Warren Professor of the History of Religion in America. Harvard University Cambridge, Massachusetts.

By Pamela C. Harriman

Chinese specialists begin with the conviction that Mr. Gorbachev is serious and determined about economic reform. Moreover, they believe that restructuring is essential if the Soviet Union is to regain economic momenturn, overcome the widening technological gap between East and West and maintain strategic parity with the United States. Yet, even as the Chinese see Mr. Gorbachev solidifying his position internally, they are uncertain about his prospects for success.

First, as one official said, the Soviet Union has had 70 years of centralized economic control and planning, nearly twice China's dosage. The fatherland of modern Communism, he seemed to say, will have a harder time disavowing its ideological identity than China has had. Second, the Cultural Revolution discredited revolutionary utopian policies. Moreover, it severely weakened the bureaucracy and produced a total turnover in leadership. The Soviet Union's institutional apparatus and apparatchiks, in the Chinese view, are far more entrenched and resistant than those in China.

Third, Beijing's foreign policy does not seriously compete for scarce resources with economic reform, as Moscow's does. They see limits to the degree to which Mr. Gorbachev can It priorities from the military to the civilian sectors without undermining military strength, the foundation of Soviet claims to great-power status.

Finally, one is struck by how strongly leaders here are gripped by a sense China's underdevelopment. "We are a poor country," one official said. 'We have no choice but to reform."

The same wary fascination that characterizes the way the Chinese see Soviet domestic developments also pervades their view of Mr. Gorbathese questions with senior govern-ment officials and experts on China's relations with the Soviet Union. chev's foreign policy initiatives, partic-ularly as they affect Asia. Chinese leaders describe these changes as shifts in "tactics and style" but not yet changes in basic objectives.

The Chinese continue to insist firmly on overcoming the "three obstacles" before high-level relations can resume. They are: the Soviet withdrawal of forces from Afghanistan (the Chinese view the recent withdrawal of six regiments as cosmetic); the withdrawal of forces from Mongolia and along China's border (the Chinese acknowledge greater progress here), and, most im-portantly, withdrawal of the Soviet-backed Vietnamese Army from Cambodia (where they see diplomatic scurrying but not much movement).

Still, from the Chinese perspective the tenor and tone of China-Soviet relations has improved - and the Chinese clearly are fascinated by the prospects of further improvement. Despite reservations about Soviez developments, they appear to want Mr. Gorbachev to succeed. An economically preoccupied Moscow poses less of a security threat to China's northern border, freeing China to concentrate more on its pressing economic agenda. An economically more vibrant Soviet Union is a healthier trading partner for China. And a steady widening of the U.S.-Soviet economic gap may make the Chinese - who are most comfortable with a superpower balance — uneasy over the long run. What then does this Chinese-Soviet minuet mean for the United States? There appears to be little danger, for the foreseeable future, of any resumption of a Chinese-Soviet alliance, or makes fundamental concessions in Asia. Moscow has little to offer that would warrant China's antagonizing the West and Japan, where the capital rapprochement so long as it is under-taken without the Chinese making concessions on basic regional interests both Beijing and Washington share. Such a reduction of tensions could defuse an always dangerous border situation and facilitate progress on resolving regional conflicts that can erupt into broader confrontations. It is important for the United States

In Los Angeles, the fee is $45 a month, plus 45 cents a minute during peak hours and 27 cents offpeak. In the New York area, the charges are $29 a month, plus 55 cents a minute peak, 35 cents offpeak. The average bill in Los Angeles, according to PacTel, is $150 a month. Some of the phone companies

Mr. Chun's labor minister, Lee Hun Ki, mediated Thursday to avert a strike by 18,000 municipal bus drivers in Seoul. Private bus companies agreed to an 11-percent raise, giving drivers an average monthly income of $565, after drivers flooded union offices with angry telephone calls at reports of a 10-percent settlement.

But on Friday in Inchon, a walkout by drivers shut down the city's 753 buses after contract negotiations broke down.

Strikes continued at hundreds of other firms. Daewoo Shipbuilding and Machinery Co., part of a large conglomerate, closed its shipyard after several days of labor disputes. Workers at Bayer Pharma Korea Ltd., a joint venture with Bayer of West Germany, demanded a 20percent wage increase and the dismissal of three out of four "highly paid" West German vice presidents, according to The Korea Herald newspaper. During his news conference at the presidential Blue House, Mr. Chun said that when he retires he hopes to travel, spend more time with his family and "without fail" write his memoirs, which he said "might be helpful to the next president and to the nation."

Gems Turning In a Sparkling Performance

International Herald Tribune

N EW YORK —The art market lis driven by two forces, fashions, rooted in taste, and the eagerness to buy, which reflects an easy cash flow. Here, the soundest indicator is the precious-stones market, where prices are determined by the quality of the raw material, not style, or hardly so.

And regarding stones, eagerness has never been so easily stirred as has just been demonstrated. On Aug. 7. The New York Times reported that a pear-shaped diamond weighing 64.83 carats and classified as D flawless, the top, was coming up at Christie's on Oct. 20. Since then, phone calls have been pouring in. True, this is the biggest D flawless diamond ever seen at auction. François Curiel, an executive vice president of Christie's North America, says that he has never seen anything like it - nor like the response it has generated. There have been 15 serious inquiries of which two are flawlessly serious. He expects the stone to sell in the area of $7 million or roughly $100,000 per carat. The Christie's as a logical sequel to the metamorphosis undergone by the gem market last season.

It has doubled in size. Curiel reckons that from September 1986 to the end of July 1987, $205 million worth of jewelry has changed hands at auction. This compares with $94 million in the previous season. According to Curiel's calculations, New York accounts for $89 million, London for $13 million, Geneva for $98 million, which includes the $50 million spent on the Duchess of Windsor's jewels at Sotheby's on April 5 and 6. Minor sales account for the remaining $5

This sale was an event of enormous magnitude. The organization of the logistics, the deft handling of the media by Sotheby's press office and the superb performance of Nicholas Rayner as an auctioneer were important factors in the stunning outcome. Yet, looking at it in retrospect, many professionals say things could not have gone differently. Had the sale taken place a year earlier, it would not have done nearly as well. There is a new climate, and dealers played a major role as boosters at the top end of the market. Professionals cite several instances.

Take one of the sensations of the Windsor sale, the 19.77 carat emerald sold for $2,167,000. This was the first time that an emerald had topped the $1 million mark. The previous record had been set in November 1979 at Christie's in Geneva, by a 12.64 carat gem sold for "only" $670,000. Yet the buyer of the $2.16 million emerald was no greenhorn impressed by the Wind-profession, worldwide. Further proof that prices of that order were not just the consequence of the Windsor mirage came in New York in the same month. On April 17, Sotheby's sold taking a hard look at how to safeguard manuscripts against vandalism and theft.

The problem of protecting important documents in places where scholars are welcome is nationwide. Manuscripts, prints and drawings have soared in value in recent years. Presidential letters and Civil War documents signed by famous generals, similar to those that were allegedly found in Mount's safe deposit boxes, are sold by private dealers and big auction houses for thousands of dollars. But it is not only the chance to make money that leads to theft by real or fraudulent scholars. According to library authorities, it is also the idea of secretly possessing a historic letter that can be a strong temptation.

The director of special collections in the library of the University of California at Los Angeles. David Zeidberg, has been studying the problem. He serves as chairman of a committee of the Association of College and Research Librarians that is dealing with the security of rare books and manuscripts. "We've written new guidelines to prevent thefts and also model legislation for states," Zeidberg said, "But we need stiffer laws against library thieves.

"One of the big flaws is that such thefts are and other institutions with rare books and some library officials: "A lot of these thefts are swept under the rug," he said. "There is some fear that trustees or donors or the public might hesitate to help a library if they thought security was weak."

Among the preventive measures proposed by the Association of College and Research Librarians are these:

• Watching researchers more carefully in reading rooms.

• Planning on how to deal with theft when it is discovered Immediate publicity among institutions and private manuscript dealers about stolen

From Autos to Soup Cans, A Bar Code Makes Its Mark

By PHILIP E. ROSS

ETROIT — The bar codes designed to hurry groceries through checkout lanes are now being applied to parts on car assembly lines, allowing automakers and suppliers to cut costs by managing their inventories more tightly. The thick and thin, black-and-white lines on soup cans, cereal boxes and most supermarket products can be read by a laser scanner, sometimes mounted on the counter.

In a grocery store, a sale is recorded and the computerized inventory is updated as soon as the code passes before the scanner. Supermarkets pioneered the technology because they had the most to gain. Profit margins are so low in that business that the moti-vation to save is higher," said Ram Rachamadugu, an indus-trial management expert at the University of Michigan's business school. "Even when the states mandated stamping the price on products, bar coding was still useful for accuracy and inventory control"

1980s, a decade after the grocery industry had adopted the uniform product code for its bar labels. The lag largely reflected a feeling in Detroit that its competitive position was secure. But faced with increased competition from overseas and the oil shocks of the 1970s, the industry began to pay more attention to cost cutting and efficiency.

Bar codes are now imposed from the top: Automakers require them of suppliers, and many suppliers require them of their suppliers. The effect has been to advance both plant automation and the Japanese manufacturing technique called "just-in-time," in which parts are shipped only as they are needed.

In 1981, 12 of the largest North American automakers and suppliers formed the Automotive Industry Action Group to establish standards for bar codes and to cajole smaller suppliers into accepting the technology.

Still, some automotive suppliers have been reluctant to accept bar coding. They feel they are being asked to bear the cost of the bar codes while the benefit goes almost wholly to the customers.

AT THE Detroit stamping plant of Budd Co., a major automotive parts supplier, J. Richard Schmitt, a materials and inventory supervisor, said that bar coding had so far saved money for customers but not for Budd. "It hasn't really done anything for reducing our inventory, said Mr. Schmitt, who is helping introduce bar coding at Budd. "Die transitions, for example, are no faster."

Die transitions, during which the molds against which metal parts are stamped are changed, are often the bottlenecks in a factory's assembly line.

Richard Kalin, an assembly clerk at Budd's plant, recently demonstrated how he would label a crate of parts ready for a shipment: "I'm asking for a GT door," he said, entering its name, destination and other specifications on a keyboard. Moments later, the computer printer spewed out a three-part panel of labels noting the part, the quantity — there were 12 doors in a crate — the customer and the date. One panel was a receipt for internal accounting, the second was for the customer and the third was a tag for the crate.

"We'll start using bar coding internally in the next 18 months,"

Mr. Schmitt said. "We don't want to jump in before the technology is proved." Budd has thus far invested $31,000 in bar coding

Because bar coding saves money for customers, and as most suppliers are themselves customers, they can expect to benefit as the process permeates the auto industry.

But there are limitations. Bar codes cannot easily be used on tiny parts such as an an electronic component. Nor do they work in wet, corrosive or otherwise hostile environments.

Mr. Zimmerman, 29, is one of a growing army of "temps," people who earn their income through temporary stints of work at various companies rather than joining the permanent payroll of a

The temporary personnel industry is booming as employers seek to keep their company costs low. Increasingly, managers are discovering that one way to cut costs and avoid the agony of layoffs when times are tough is to take on extra workers only for limited periods.

Moreover, the companies that supply temporary help have benefited from a seemingly inexhaustible demand for workers who are up-to-date in modern office technology. As Mr. Zimmerman's own experience shows, however, temps perform a wide range of tasks.
"We had a request once where we han a request once where they wanted people to sniff air out of bags," said Marjorie A. Bartok, a Los Angeles area manager with Manpower Inc., the world's largest supplier of temporary personnel. Concerned about safety, Manpower turned down the order, which was from a pollution-control company.

MILWAUKEE - Manpower Inc., the world's largest temporary services company, said Friday that it had approved an offer from Blue Arrow PLC of Britain to merge in a $1.33 billion deal.

Manpower's board accepted a sweetened offer of $82.50 for each of its 16.1 million shares outstanding at a special board meeting. It had rejected a previous bid from Blue Arrow valued at 1.2 billion or $75

Blue Arrow is the biggest employment agency in Britain, but is much smaller than Manpower, which operates 1,400 offices internationally. Manpower had said its management would support the new d shortly after Blue Arrow unveiled the proposal Friday. Manpower's share price closed $3.75 higher at $81.75 in active

Adia SA, the Swiss company that operates the world's second-biggest employment agency, said earlier that it had decided against a siness arrangement with Manpower to thwart the takeover.

By Herbert H. Denton

Washington Past Service
TORONTO --- For the past generation one of the most emotional issues in Canadian politics has been the extent of U.S. ownership an companies have become key players among the foreign investors descending on the United States. Canadian companies now employ more than 527,000 Americans, more than double the number employed by U.S. affiliates of Japa-

"The United States is a very large market and we'd like to be a part of it," he said.

Alan M. Rugman, an economist at the University of Toronto, contended in a recent study that if What has been largely unnoticed trends continue, the level of direct here is the extent to which Canadi-Canadian investment in the United States could equal U.S. investment in Canada in five years.

Mr. Rugman's study, for the Toronto-based C.D. Howe Institute research organization, charts a reversal in investment flows between Canada and the United States over nese companies and second only to the past decade.

Most of the Canadian investment in the United States has been in real estate and manufacturing, although it has also included retail businesses and publishing. The big players have tended to be the huge Canadian conglomerates such as the distiller Seagram Co., forest products company MacMillan Bloedel and brewer John Labatt.

The Toronto-headquartered International Thomson Organization newspaper chain, long an investor in the United States, last year paid $250 million for South-Western Publishing Co., an Ohio-based math textbook publishing house, uted the trend to several factors. and also bought the Times, of Cumberland, Maryland, which raised the total number of newspapers it now owns in the United States to 96.

U.S. Weighing Charges Against Japanese Trucks

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration and the big three U.S. automotive companies are considering filing an unfair trade practices complaint against the makers of compact Japanese trucks, Commerce Department officials said Friday.

One official said that no decision to file a charge had yet been made, but "this is being taken very seriously."

The officials said the complaint would charge the Japanese with absorbing the fall of the dollar against the yen and selling the trucks at under cost to retain their share of the U.S.

Commerce officials said if the Japanese firms were found to be dumping, temporary du-ties would be levied on the trucks to bring their price up to fair value.

WASHINGTON - The Securities and Exchange Commission, in fear of being accused of insider trading itself, said it has decided not to sell the stock it obtained from Ivan F. Boesky as part of the settlement of the Wall Street arbitrager's insider trading case.

The commission said Thursday it feared that if it sold the stock and the shares then lost value because of information turned up in the SEC investigation, the commission could be accused of withholding pertinent information from the

The decision came a few weeks after it was reported that the value of the shares - put at $50 million when the commission received them last November - has declined to $37 million. ## Dow Edges Up to Set Record

NEW YORK - The Dow Jones industrial iverage set its 54th record of the year Friday. inding a volatile week with only a slight gain in ective trading

The broader market was almost unchanged from Thursday because of continued weakness

The Dow, which dropped 46 points on Thursday, closed Friday up 2.71 to 2.709.50. It was the third record of the week.

The Dow had been up as much as 11 points in early Friday trading.

Advancing issues just barely outnumbered ased to about 191 million shares from the 196.5 In addition to the Dow, broader market indexes broke day-old records. The New York Stock Exchange index rose 0.47 to 187.51 and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index added 1.06 block in the way of the charging bull."

What we learned this week." she said. "is that the dollar is the wild card. We don't necessitat the sarily need a rising dollar, but we do need a stable dollar for the market to keep surging." Investors demonstrated their sensitivity to the dollar early in the week when the U.S. currency, in a delayed reaction to the report last Friday of a bulging trade deficit, tumbled and Wall Street feared a lower dollar would discourage foreign investment in U.S. stocks.

"Institutions are still heavy with eash and they appear comfortable putting it to work in stocks," said Thomas Ryan of Kidder Peabody. He also said that there has been no indication that foreign investment has abated this week even though the dollar has fallen about ten yen since the release of the trade figures a week ago.

Mr. Ryan said that the slight rise in the Dow on Friday was almost entirely due to the sharp rise in Phillip Morris, one of the 30 industrials in the average.

Shares of tobacco stocks rose sharply after the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th District in Atlania ruled in favor of American Brands in a closely-watched case that could have an impact on future liability cases against tobacco companies, traders and analysts said.

The court said that the company can use federal eigenette labeling laws as a defense against suits that claim its eigenette products caused the death of a smoker. Shares of American Brands rose 2% to 55%,

Philip Morris climbed 4% to 1111/2 and RJR lahisaa 3 to 64%. Smithkline Beckman Corp fell 5% to 65%

after Bolar Pharmaceutical said it received Food and Drug Administration approval to produce the generic equivalent of Smithkline's Dyazide drug, traders and analysts said. Dyazide is Smithkline's second-biggest selling drug. It is a diuretic and an anti-hypertensive drug that contributes about $300 million in sales to Smithkline.

DOLLAR: Fall Attributed to Revised GNP, Price Data

London Dollar Rates

1,8147 1,4390 1,42,75 1,5340 4,6400

Swiss francs, down from 1.5143; and to 6.0800 French francs, down from 6.1084.

The dollar was also weaker against the British pound, which closed at $1.6300, against $1.6215

Thursday.

Many dealers in London said they thought the selling was overdone and that a cooler, more favorable view of economic data released Friday would combine with fort-covering to support the dolfar in the coming week.

But others said bearish sentiment is still strong and that there are likely to be further downside tests.

"If it goes down through 1.80 marks early on, you could see it coming off quite sharply." said one

Continuing tension in the Gulf, and the slim rise in consumer prices

TOKYO — Japan has adopted a relaxed attitude toward the dollar's recent decline because of its confi-dence in the health of its economy and in the willingness of major nations to curb sharp currency fluctuations, according to economists.

The government also stands to benefit in some ways from the yen's rise, which has helped dampen inflationary expectations and led to a rally in the bond market where it sells its debt, they said.

Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa surprised dealers Thursday by saying that currency rates hold down inflation, economists should be left to the market.

His comments caused an avalanche of dollar selling, driving the growth accelerated to 10.3 percent currency to its lowest level against in July from 10 percent in June.

Fed Panel Reports Targets

NEW YORK - The Federal Open Market Committee, the Federal Reserve policy-making panel. voted at its July 7 meeting to maintain the existing degree of reserve restraint, minutes released Friday

The committee set a 5 percent June to September growth target for M-2 and one of 71/2 percent for M-3, with no target for M-1. At its prior meeting on May 19, the committee set a target of around 6 per-cent or less for both M-2 and M-3 for the March to June period, without an M-1 goal.

M-1 is a measure of money supply growth that includes currency in circulation, traveler's checks and checking deposits at financial insti-

M-2 includes M-1 plus savings and small time deposits, most money market mutual fund shares and other items. M-3, the broadest aggregate, includes M-2, large time deposits and other items.

At its July meeting, the committee maintained the 4 percent to 8 percent federal funds rate reference range in place at the prior meeting.

In its policy directive, the July panel members said "somewhat greater reserve restraint or somehat lesser reserve restraint would be acceptable depending on indications of inflationary pressures and on developments in foreign exchange markets, as well as the behavior of the aggregates and the strength of the business expan-

Nevertheless. "The Bad War" is a balanced work. More than 75 hawks and doves.

I N Studs Terkel's pioneering oral history of World War II. " The Good War," the author placed quotation marks around the title. He explained in a prefatory note that he added them "not as a matter of caprice or editorial comment, but simply because the adjective 'good' mated to the noun 'war' is so incongruous.

An Oral History of the Vietnam War

By contrast, in "The Bad War: An Oral History of the Vietnam War" - written by Kim Willenson with the correspondents of Newsweek - no quotation marks are added to the title. The reason for omitting any such ironic qualifying touch is also not capricious. The dedication by Willenson, the book's editor, helps to explain why: "To the names on the Wall" monument in Washington "and all the other

The Vietnam syndrome — fear of getting bogged down in the Big Muddy of war again - occupies the attention of a number of the commentators here. J.

The 12-year-old boy from Gary had turned in the greatest week any hitter ever had in the Little League World Series — or even in the adult version.

When he came home, McClendon was a civic legend. He became an all-state catcher for Roosevelt High, and then he went to Valparaiso University, where he was cap-tain and most valuable player. They named a park after him in the Junedale District, a field used for

"It's quite embarrassing, to tell you the truth," he said. "I don't talk about it unless people bring it up. It's flattering that they remember, but the funny thing is, I can only remember the last one."

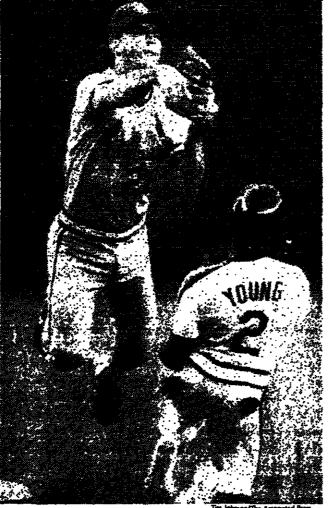

McClendon married, had a child, and settled in Boulder, Colorado, while he hit 40 homers in two seasons for Denver — nearly half on the road, rather than in the rarified air at home.

Johnson, whose bat was challenged for the third time this season after he hit his 30th home run Wednesday night, got only one bunt single Thursday after his bat was returned. Maldonado got into the game as a pinch-hitter in the ninth inning and struck out.

The game was watched by A. Bartlett Giamatti, president of the league, who defended the new policy that allows each manager one challenge in a game. "I hope we never find anything." Giamatti said. ## NFL Decision on Draft Is Criticized

By Gerald Eskenazi

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The National Football League's decision to con-duct a draft for players who had lost their eligibilty for accepting money from agents has been criticized as harmful for college football because of the possibility that it could lead to an increase in rules

"This case produces a bizarre result," said Leigh Steinberg, a lawtime of 24-man rosters, and this year the Reds kept him for more than four more t than four months. Bailey said he hoped to meet with NFL officials in New York

"I don't want to appear unduly critical of the league, but a lot of people in academics are disappointed," he said.

Coach Joe Paterno of Penn State, who boasts an 80 percent graduation rate for the football players he has had over the past 21 years, said of the NFL's decision: "It's going to cause some problems with college football. The NFL has its own problems, and I guess they've got to do what they've got to do to protect themselves."

Unseeded Lundgren, 22, controlled the tempo of the match Thursday, using crisp passing shots and aggressive play at the net, to beat the top-seeded Wilander, 6-1, 6-4, and advance to the quarterfinals. "It's the best feeling I've ever had as a tennis player," Lundgren said. "It means a lot of points [in the world rankings]. He's the No. 1 Swede, No. 2 in the world, so it's a very good result." Wilander won the tournament in 1983, 1984 and 1986. "He's a good player, when he gets it going," said Wilander, who was 23 on Friday. "For him, there's nothing inbetween. He's really up or down. Now he's playing really well."

THE latest addition to the Greek navy, swoop-L ing like a stately nautical centipede across the Bay of Phaleron near Athens, is a 45-ton warship of the kind that once ruled the seas and profoundly influenced the development of the modern world.

The ship is a replica, as exact as science, scholarship and inspired guesswork can make it of a 170oar trireme from the heyday of Athenian power in the fifth century B.C., the first to be built for perhaps 2,000 years.

In the presence of Andreas Papandreou, the prime minister, Melina Mercouri, the culture minister and other civilian and military dignitaries, the ship will be commissioned in the Hellenic navy Wednesday and then rowed along the coast to a mooring off the island of Kea so that the population of Athens can have a good look at it.

Until the commissioning, its name is by tradi-tion a military secret — although the betting is on Olympia, a name that graced triremes in the classical period, and that symbolizes Greece's present hope of hosting the 1996 Olympic Games.

'It is so beautiful," Mercouri said in a telephone interview. " It represents Greece in all her glory." Until recently, no one had a clear idea of how a trireme performed or what it was like to ply one of its oars. These questions are of significance to anyone who wonders how a tiny city-state in distant history could have produced so many ideas that still influence the 20th century. The trireme was fundamental to Athens' greatness and to the development of its democracy.

That this one was built is partly due to John Coates's tennis elbow. Laid up for six months with that affliction in 1979, Coates turned from his usual job of helping to design destrovers for the British Royal Navy to pondering how the trireme worked. In doing so, he studied a book by John Morrison, a professor of classics, about Greek oared ships.

In 1941. Morrison put forward the theory, derided by many other scholars at the time, that the oarsmen on a trireme were arranged on three levels with oars of the same length, about six meters (19 feet). Other theories were that the rowers were on the same level, or that there were three men to each

Coates deduced that Morrison was right. Putting together all the evidence, he said in a telephone interview from Athens, "I found there was only one possible design," and only Morrison's theory fitted all the known facts about triremes. Just as modern weapons tend to look alike according to their function, he said, the trireme had to be built in a certain way according to its function of ramming enemy ships at high speed with its semisubmerged bronze beak.

Many scraps of evidence went into Coates's design. He knew the size the ship had to be -about 37 meters long by 5.5 wide - from the dimensions of boat sheds excavated near Athens. Because the upkeep of the triremes was privately financed by wealthy Athenians as part of their "liturgia" or public service obligations, detailed inventories exist. Inscriptions from ancient naval dockyards provided a virtual shopping list of the materials needed to build a trireme. Thucydides, Xenophon and other classical authors gave information about the trireme's performance. Thucydides told how the crew of one trireme, sustained by barley dipped in oil and wine, averted a massacre by rowing the 184 nautical miles from Athens to Mytilene in 24 hours, an average speed of more than 7 1/2 knots. Ramming speeds were much higher than that.

Finally, recent underwater discoveries of sunker Greek merchant ships, and particularly of a long ship off the coast of Sicily, gave Coates a good idea of the construction methods employed.

Coates got in touch with Morrison to cooperate on the design of a trireme at what he called "the dilettante level, as a hobby for a couple of retired gentlemen." Later a writer and former banker. Frank Welsh, offered to sponsor the building of a trireme and Coates started drawing detailed plans. The plans were shown at a symposium in London in April, 1983, at which point the Greek government became interested. After a model of a section of the ship was successfully tested on the Thames, it was agreed the trireme would be built for the Greek navy at Piraeus, from where the Athenians set off on their ancient naval battles. It was built in two years at the shipyard of Dmitrios Tzakakos at a cost of 80 million drachmas (about $560,000). "That's expensive, but she is so beautiful," said Commander Nikos Gogos, a spokesman for the navy,

Coates, Morrison and Welsh watched proudly as a team of British university and club rowers put the trireme through its sea trials off the island of Poros earlier this month. "The Greek navy has been marvelous in paying John Coates and me the compliment of believing what we said," Morrison said in a telephone interview. "It does look as if we put it together right."

Coates said the Trireme "maneuvers rather better than expected. She steers beautifully." The oars were deliberately made on the heavy side to prevent breakage during the inevitable tangles. And the British crew was not well matched in terms of weight and size. Nevertheless they managed to raise seven knots for a few minutes during the trials. "With lighter oars and a properly graded crew, nine knots is in sight," Coates said.

Using sails, the trireme was able to reach at a respectable 5 knots in a 15-knot wind. In ancient times, the sails were used on passage when the wind served, but not in battle.

Getting 170 people, each with less legroom than passenger on the average charter aircraft, to pull together in faultless precision was a lesson in human relations and a clue to what made the ancient Athenians the kind of people they were.

"Our preliminary experiences have shown that it would have been crazy to try to man one of these things with any crew that didn't want to be aboard." Coates said.

The fact that Athenian triremes were rowed by free citizens, not slaves or mercenaries, is a clue to the nature of Athenian democracy in the fifth century B.C.

According to a writer of the period, known to historians as the Old Oligarch, it was appropriate in Athens that "the poor and the common people should seem to have more power than the noble and rich, because it is this class that provides the rowers for the fleet and on which the power of the city is based."

The importance of the fleet shifted power away from the propertied yeomen who provided the hoplites, or heavily armed soldiers, and toward the garlic-chewing "sailor rabble" in the city who manned the triremes.

With help from Corinth, the Athenian fleet nashed Xerxes and his borde at Salamis in 480 B.C., removed the threat of Persian invasion, and opened the way to Athens' golden age, but also to an age of fighting among the Greeks.

Naval supremacy gave the Athenians an empire, a confidence and a cosmopolitanism never seen refore. Most Greeks, said the Old Oligarch, were insular "whereas the culture of Athens is a medley of elements drawn from all parts of the Greek world and even from the Barbarians."

Commodore Apostolos Vassiliadis of the Greek Navy said it is hoped to take the trireme to other countries as an evocation of that age. Beyond using the vessel to further historical research, the navy has made no firm plans for its latest acquisition. A Greek team of oarsmen drawn from rowing clubs is in training to man the ship, which will be commanded by a naval officer, Lieutenant Dmitrios Papadas. Asked if other navies would be welcome to send crews to row the trireme, Vassiliadis replied, "Why not?"

Later this month, scholars from around the world will meet at Delphi for a conference on ship construction in history, and the experience gained from building and rowing the trireme is likely to be a major topic of discussion.

Coates said an enormous amount can potentially be learned about battles and naval tactics of the past by studying the performance of the trireme. The Athenians avoided close quarters combat and instead used a combination of speed and complicated maneuvers to defeat their enemies.

But the Athenians ignored the advice of their greatest statesman, Pericles, by becoming involved in a land war far from home. In 413, the Atbenian fleet was destroyed by a combined Syracusan and Spartan force in the harbor at Syracuse in Sicily.

The Athenian sailors and ships were out of condition after a long siege. They were blocked in a narrow harbor where they could not employ their swooping tactics. The Syracusans reinforced their ships and charged prow first into the Athenian Sparta destroyed the Greek fleet at Aegospotami and what little remained of Athenian democracy in 405 B.C. The sound of wailing arose all over Athens, said Xenophon, because the Athenians "thought that they themselves would now be dealt with as they had dealt with others." It was, effectively, the end of the age of the democraticallymanned trireme.
